

Trust and Integrity in the Global Economy

Building pathways to a secure world by going beyond the bottom line

Friday 13 July (16.45) – Wednesday 18 July (noon) 2007

Mountain House, Caux, Switzerland

Dated 8 February 2007

Background: Traditional jurisdictional boundaries are fast disappearing in our globalized world today. The need for trust and integrity is being felt more than before, in our own regional economies and our global one. How does one aspire to achieve this trust and integrity in our global economy? What relationship does this bear with the bottom line? Should we go beyond this bottom line to secure our future? How?

TIGE strives to answer these questions by addressing value driven leadership, social corporate responsibility, global environmental and farming initiatives of change and ethics at the workplace.

Who Should Attend: The conference offers a safe space for discussion, reflection and decision making in the inspiring surroundings of Mountain House, Caux. People from various businesses, especially those young professionals launching into their careers, farmers and other professions will come together to meet among themselves to develop an action plan for Trust and Integrity in our Global Economy.

Outcomes: It is hoped that participants will feel empowered to share their stories of personal transformation at their workplace after listening to speakers in the conference and other participants; share areas where trust and integrity is needed; endeavour to inspire each other to take globalization personally, see how it affects individuals and consolidate ideas, initiatives and ways to challenge it.
